Organization shows support for state coal industry

CHARLESTON -- The West Virginia Conservative Foundation is showing its support for the coal industry.

The group sponsored a pro-coal rally at the State Capitol in Charleston this morning.

One of the reasons for the rally was to protest the Environmental Protection Agency's decision to delay 79 applications for surface coal mining permits.

Those applications came from West Virginia, Kentucky, Ohio and Tennessee.

The West Virginia Conservative Foundation was formed as an independent organization to promote conservative values and policies at the federal, state and local levels.
